Asking “where are you really from?” may seem like a simple question. And it may not come from a place that is hateful. But assuming that someone who does not look like you is an outsider is an example of unintentional racism.